

REGIONAL & COMMUTER AIRCRAFT MARKETS

Market Comment

As the year draws to a close, 2004 has proved to be quite a remarkable year. In spite of many concerns and ongoing problems in the industry, every month but one, we have seen commercial transport aircraft availability drop. As a result, there are now just over 1,000 aircraft being offered for sale and lease in the market, which represents a significant 70% decrease in availability over the past 12 months.

Breaking out this statistic by category of aircraft, we find the availability of wide-body jets has dropped by a half (from 265 to 131 units), narrow-body jets by one third (from 587 to 389 units), turboprop aircraft by almost a quarter (from 481 to 367 units), and interestingly the availability of regional jets has increased slightly, by just over 10% (from 118 to 131 units).
